Passengers by this line have the option of

feels she is cribbed and cabined. She is under restriction in many ways; and these restrictions, called her circumstances, are everywhere to be broken through. She is not more laugher than comical, or more serious than grave. Sometimes she looks at a servant indistinctly music which she longs to hear fully, and sees indistinctly faces and splendours which she yearns to examine more closely. But she can't get out to them. When her mistress is similarly cabined what does she do? She fumes. Why, then, upbraid when Bridget sulks? A servant's lot is naturally hard; many mistresses make it harder. The baptismal font may have given her a euphous name as Clytemnestra, or Araminta, but when she enters service she must drop the music of these syllables and go about as plain Bridget or unromantic Mary. Bridget and Mary were sweet names, but they may be again when the music of passion is banished from civilization; but for the time being they are unromantic, and because they are unromantic, mistresses keep them in stock for their best-looking girls. It is estimated that eighty-five out of every hundred girls in service are named Bridget or Mary. And a white lace-cap is also put on the girl's head. There is not so much to say against this. Bridget's head-dress often assists the visitor. It tells him that that pretty girl walking along the hall is the servant, while the ugly one coming down stairs is the real Miss De Boots. The ingenious visitor values a piece of information acquired thus early. But to Bridget it is not always pleasant. Sometimes makes her feel as if service were servitude.

Worse things are said to her. In some cases Bridget's whole time is supposed to be at the disposal of her mistress. Her mistress's visitors may be a most irregular set. They may come any hour of the day and may not come for a month, but Bridget is always supposed to be on hand. It may be that, considering the next day would be like the one before, she had made an appointment with the butcher or the baker. The hour and the butcher arrive—but at that very instant the front door opens, and an afternoon intended to be glorified with cooling is degraded with cooking. There is no doubt that this is trying to the temper, nor is it astonishing if a piece of crockery immortalized in conversation. Bridget's feelings are relieved at the visitor's expense, so they spend themselves on what is nearest. To minimise friction on this account some mistresses forbid their servants to receive visitors—"followers" is the inelegant matronly expression. A rigid rule of this sort exasperates in many ways. A young girl has her name changed from Iolanthe to Biddy, the tresses which used to hang upon her shoulders are rolled up or cut off, and a white cap set on the top of her head, and she is now forbidden to speak to her "cousin." Unless the mistresses have a grown son or compassionate husband, the girl, when young and sensitive, will be in danger of falling into loneliness, if not melancholy, moods, if the rule be successfully applied. Nature, however, never gives her children what she will. To the arbitrary rule of woman or man, and hence Iolanthe manages somehow to maintain a healthy relationship with her old world.

We say nothing about bad mistresses and bad maids. Both exist, but they do not concern us here. What we are indicating here is that in general, mistresses' dissatisfaction with servants is owing to the fact that they want too much. Servants' dissatisfaction with mistresses has a similar origin. The mistress cannot have everything as she would just like to have it without trenching on the unwritten rights of the maid; nor can the maid have everything without leaving the mistress short. The cause of only laws and maid's rights are in circles. Mistresses generally think that what can be made of a maid. Over and above the question of duty, there are the questions of female rivalry, female jealousy, female ambition, and female vanity. Bridget will show off, if her mistress shows off. She will take holidays, if her mistress has them. If her mistress conducts her affairs in utter disregard of the convenience of Bridget, Bridget will forget her mistress's convenience from time to time. These are laws of human nature. They are the same the world over. At heart, Bridget is as desirous of rule as is her mistress. When obstructed she is as temperamental and rovably vindictive. Her cap is not only a dining-room or kitchen crown is only a lace cap, and not a scriptre, a dust-brush; but when she has cherished scheme is thwarted by her mistress, Cleopatra, Agrippina, or Elizabeth never felt more imperially mad. When those persons were driven into tempers, one of them ordered a slave to be whipped, another poured a drop of irritant poison into her victim's cup, and the third swore at and slapped her minister in the face. Bridget, with the same emotions surging within her, stretches out a stout red arm and sweeps the sideboard clean.

Substantially things are thus all the world over. Mrs. Todd, however, cries with a special vigour. She shames for reform. She will make the spouses of mistresses and servants concentric. In her own household she succeeds, the mistress will be not only absolute monarch, but will hold unquestioned sway over the entire kingdom of her kingdom home. Her maid—even her maid—will bow down. Mrs. Todd, with genuine Puritan confidence, asks England to help her. If England helps, it is assumed that all will go well. Australian mistresses will send their orders to London, in answer girls of the required age and size and complexion and weight will be despatched, as other soft-goods are now despatched, by agents, and the calamitous colonial girl will get the run. That looks simple, but we think that Mrs. Todd will make the ache back. It is not so much the philosophy of the matter, but the realisation that English mistresses are also in travail with the servant difficulty. Not so long ago a number of English mistresses in a fit of desperation or of folly as painfully evident as Mrs. Todd's, proposed to import monkeys and have them instructed to do the work of abigail. The proposal fell through, but it should show Mrs. Todd that dear old England is as badly off in respect to "those household spies whom we call servants" as her own Australia. If, however, a number of girls came out under Mrs. Todd's scheme, what would be the condition of the natives? could the service be read in England or held for sale there? If signed in England there is little doubt that Parliament would declare such contracts null. We are coming to that point in legislation, and any such step as importing servants under contract would precipitate the question. If the girls came here unbound a sufficient number of them would shirk the obligation of paying back their passage-money to make it a dear experiment for the mistresses. Only one danger is to be apprehended from the scheme. Out of it may come a resolve to let England to ship off larger numbers of natives to the service here, and to let the natives arrive. If the numbers were really large the local market value of servants would be reduced. Domestic servants at present here would consequently suffer. Unless it could be shown that Australia would gain by the influx, resistance to it should be made. It is to the best interests of the country that high rates of wages should be maintained over the whole field of labour, anything like an organised attempt by parties outside the boundaries of the country, to cut down the value of labour in any of its departments should be resisted with the combined power of all. It is to the best interests of the country that the natives should be kept out. However, to glorify in this would be to seriously pursue a portion of a scheme the whole of which is not well valued. Looking at it in half earnest the Editorial writes:

SCOTT'S Emulsion of Pure Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites, for Rickets, Marasmus and all wasting disorders of children, is very remarkable in its results. The rapidity with which children gain flesh and strength upon it is very wonderful. Read the following:—"I have tried 'Scott's Emulsion' in cases of wasting in young children, and I am of opinion that it is a valuable preparation for such cases." The children take it and ask for more, and the good effects are apparent. I consider it far superior to ordinary Cod Liver Oil."—J. MARSHALL, M.R.C.S., &c., 143, Grange Road, Brompton, S.W.
